

Lindsey Savage

Lindsey Savage is a founding member and former director of The Military Spouse JD Network. MSJDN supports military spouses in the legal profession by advocating for licensing accommodations for military spouse attorneys; educating the public about the challenges faced by career-minded military spouses and their families; encouraging the hiring of military spouses; and providing a network connecting military spouse attorneys with each other and their supporters. Lindsey practices in the fields of general corporate law, litigation, and intellectual property law. She manages her own firm, Savage Law PC (Kirkland, WA), and is Of Counsel to SRD Legal Group PLLC (New York, NY).

Lindsey has spent nearly a decade working at law firms representing global corporate clients. She has worked with corporations, business owners, and individuals, handling business-related transactional and litigation matters in New York, Tokyo, Monterey, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Seattle. Prior to attending law school, Lindsey worked in the television industry in Manhattan.

Lindsey earned her Doctor of Jurisprudence at St. John's University School of Law in Queens, NY, where she served on the boards of the Intellectual Property Law Society and on the Entertainment, Art, and Sports Law Society. She also participated in the Domestic Violence Litigation Clinic in collaboration with New York Legal Assistance Group, a non-profit dedicated to providing free civil legal services to New Yorkers who cannot afford a private attorney.

A Michigan native and graduate of the University of Michigan, Lindsey enjoys traveling the world with her husband, a Naval Meteorology & Oceanography Officer, and their three children. Lindsey has been repeatedly recognized for her dedication to pro-bono work by the New York and Washington State Bar Associations and has a soft spot for non-profit organizations serving the military community.
